Book Review

“A book is a gift you can open again and again”

Introduction :-

Book Name :- My Experiments With Truth

Author Name :- M.K. Gandhi

Genre :- Autobiography

Gandhi's autobiography is a must read for every Indian. Every citizen must form their own unbiased opinion of the Father of the Nation, and reading his own words will help one do that. This is one of those rare books which the reader either loves or hates; there is no middle ground.

Mahatma Gandhi was not an ordinary man. This is a statement that begs to be investigated. His autobiography offers the perfect opportunity to gaze into the life of an iconic leader whose humility is married to a charismatic personal. This book will revolutionize your thinking and present Gandhiji as a man.

He endeavored to learn Latin and treated diseases by dietic modifications. He walked 10 miles a day, staunchly followed a vegetarian diet and practiced rigorous fasting. You often turn to look at the cover page mulling whether this mild-looking dhoti clad figure who gave up salt for 10 years to wrangle against British rule would be so adventurous, so determined to find the ‘truth’ about every aspect of life that he carried out his own unbiased research into it and refused to be satisfied with anybody else’s notions of right and wrong.

Gandhi was an erudite personality. He was a student of comparative religion and one can witness the wisdom in his spirituality, he being a devout Hindu who showed immense respect for all religions. He exhibits remarkable fortitude and patience in his personal and professional life. His non-violent views may have appeared iconoclastic and controversial at the time, but they proved very effective.

My View :-

I hope this book is best suited for reading for teenagers and youths to dream and to dare. It shows, how a person from modest background ends up being first citizen of a nation of one billion.
